PRESENTER 1: Oh, yes. Oscar movie cut bestiality scenes.

PRESENTER 2: What?

PRESENTER 1: Well, we can now be told of the story of Julian Schnabel's incredible movie Before Night Falls. Actor Javier Bardem won the IFP West Independent Spirit award, and was nominated for an Oscar as well for his extraordinary work as the late Cuban poet Reinaldo Arenas. In the book Before Night Falls, Arenas described his childhood and poverty in Cuba. But what was left out of the movie, or so was reported, were graphic recollections of bestiality.

PRESENTER 2: What?

PRESENTER 1: Arenas lays out, very specifically, his love life as a child with cows, sheep, and chickens.

PRESENTER 2: Oh, my god.

PRESENTER 1: But I can tell you how more the reporter was personally relieved that none of this was included in the movie.

PRESENTER 2: I can imagine.

PRESENTER 1: But it turns out the scenes were filmed.

PRESENTER 2: Oh.

PRESENTER 1: A couple of weeks before the Academy Awards, Javier confirmed that scenes were shot of the young Reinaldo making love to farm animals. Even stranger, the young Reinaldo was played by the director's son. Thankfully, these scenes were acted, and there was no actual congress between the youthful actor and the animals.

PRESENTER 2: We have to go now.

PRESENTER 1: We know. I just looked up and saw.

PRESENTER 2: OK.
